NEW QUESTION: 1

How do you enable a default connection between Database as a Service (DBaaS) instances?

- A. by creating nothing for communication between the DBaaS instances because all instances are interconnected by default
- B. by installing and configuring the NETMGR utility for your DBaaS environment, and then using it to set up the required communication channels
- C. by creating dedicated communication keys and setting them to be used only for your DBaaS instance to- instance communication
- D. by creating network groups and adding the instances that you want to communicate to that group

Answer: C

Explanation:

Before your DBaaS database was created, you or a coworker generated a private and public SSH key pair, perhaps using PuTTY Key Generator.

The public key was specified when your database instance was created; a copy of that public key was stored in the VM hosting your database.

When you define in PuTTY an SSH connection to the VM hosting your database, you will specify a copy of the private key stored on your local PC. When you initiate a PuTTY connection, the VM compares the private key to the matching public key stored in the VM. The VM permits the connection when the private and public key match as a valid key pair.

NEW QUESTION: 3

A System Administrator wants to configure an XGS so that when the SSH_Brute_Force security event is triggered against machine Server1, any further traffic from the source IP address contained in the security event alert is dropped for a timed period.

How should the System Administrator configure the XGS to perform this?

A. Create a Network Access policy object with a quarantine rule to block the source IP when the security event is triggered against Server1.

B. Create a Network Access policy object to drop all traffic from the source IP contained in the security event alert to Server1.

C. Edit the properties of the SSH_Brute_Force security event and create a quarantine response to block the source IP.

D. Create an IPS Filter policy object for the SSH_Brute_Force security event with a Victim address of Server1 and a quarantine response to block the source IP

Answer: A

Explanation:

Question

Why are some events allowed after setting a block response?

Cause

Most network attacks are carried out in a single packet or in several packets that are reconstructed into a single "session." For these attacks, the Block response in the XGS Intrusion Prevention policy is appropriate to use, and is translated into a block packet response and/or into a block connection response.

Certain events, however, are classified as "non-sequitur."

Non-sequitur events are events that require a succession of packets to occur before the signature is triggered. For example, a port scan signature may require a succession of ten port probes before the signature would trigger. In this case, many of the offending "packets" would have already passed through the system.

Answer

For these types of signatures, you must set the Quarantine response in addition to the Block response under the Default Repository > Shared Objects > Intrusion Prevention > select signature > Edit > enable the quarantine response under the Quarantine tab > Save.

The quarantine response blocks the offending IP for a period of time, ensuring that the remaining probes do not get through. The standard block packet or drop connection responses (set by the Block response) are ineffective in stopping this kind of activity when not used in conjunction with Quarantine.

List of non-sequitur events include SSH_Brute_Force.
