Answer: A

Explanation:

Authenticates and how it stores credentials. Option A uses an anonymous Put, which may allow other apps to write counterfeit data; Option B is the right answer, because using Amazon Cognito gives you the ability to securely authenticate pools of users on any type of device at scale. Option C would put credentials directly into the application, which is strongly discouraged because applications can be decompiled which can compromise the keys. Option D does not meet our availability requirements: although the EC2 instances are running in different Availability Zones, the EBS volumes attached to each instance only store data in a single Availability Zone.
