NEW QUESTION: 2

Refer to the exhibit.

Switch 1 and switch 2 run open Shortest Path First (OSPF) on all VLANs. Both switches establish an OSPF adjacency to a router at the main data center. Exhibit shows some virtual Routing Redundancy Protocol (VRRP) and OSPF settings on Switch 1 during normal operation.

How can a network administrator increase the resiliency of this solution?

- A. Implement Bidirectional Forwarding Detection (BFD) on the peer keep alive link between the core switches.
- B. Configure Switch 1 as an OSPF graceful restart helper in VLAN 11 and Switch 2 as a helper in VLAN 10
- C. Make sure that, in each VRRP instance, each switch has a VRRP preempt delay of several minutes.
- D. Change the VLAN 10 subnet to a /24 subnet and enable VRRP on it. Place Switch 2's link to the main data center in this subnet.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Today many Internet routers implement a separation of control and forwarding functions. Certain processors are dedicated to control and management tasks such as OSPF routing, while other processors perform the data forwarding tasks. This separation creates the possibility of maintaining a router's data forwarding capability while the router's control software is restarted/reloaded. We call such a possibility "graceful restart" or "non-stop forwarding".
